As Nakuru town embarks on its ambitious target of becoming a city, with tremendous growth in the property segment, property owners in the central business district (CBD) are staring at empty office space.

Ultra-modern high-rise buildings providing commercial office space have remained empty as demand hits an all-time low.

This is coming at a time when Governor Lee Kinyanjui's administration is digitising the approval of building plans to reduce the time it takes investors to begin their projects.
